Key points in defense on Day X

- availability of bomb shelters at enterprises;
- alternative energy supply solutions in case of power and communication interruptions;
- division of functionality and cross-functionality of employees (some will volunteer to fight, others will be under occupation or without communication);
- it is very important to maintain logistics or think through alternative supply chains
- creation of agreements and instructions for day “X”. In order to maintain team spirit and start work processes at the first opportunity, managers need to maintain contact with employees;
- if possible, consider a humanitarian reserve to provide water, food and essentials to personnel and their families.
